

BRAND & PRODUCT DESIGN

See the difference between effort and autocomplete.

A writing-process platform for teachers, built on evidence — not verdicts.
This deck walks through the Inkprint brand system and the marketing landing page.

- Literary & Academic identity
- Pro-teacher, pro-student
- Evidence over verdicts

01 – VISION

A platform that captures how the work was made — not just what it looks like.

Inkprint is not an output classifier. It is a writing-process platform that treats AI as a collaborator to be evaluated — not an enemy to be detected. A better LLM doesn't help a student fake a 90-minute writing session.

02 — DIFFERENTIATION

Structural, not cosmetic.

Where incumbents compete on a single output score, Inkprint changes the axis entirely.

AXIS	INCUMBENTS	INKPRINT
What's analyzed	The finished text	The writing process itself
Compared to	A global AI-vs-human model	The student's own prior work
Framing	Catch cheaters	Evaluate AI collaboration
Output	A percentage	An evidence sheet for a conversation
Defensibility vs new LLMs	Erodes with every model	Unaffected — process can't be faked
Lawsuit exposure	High — false positives	Low — process + per-student baseline

See the difference between effort and autocomplete.

Inkprint reads how an essay was written — keystrokes, pauses, revisions — and gives teachers a one-page evidence sheet, not a verdict.

04 — HOW IT WORKS

Three steps, one evidence sheet.

Inkprint sits quietly behind the writing tools teachers and students already use.

01

Capture the process

A lightweight editor, browser extension, and Docs/Word add-in record keystrokes, pauses, revisions, and paste events while the student writes.

02

Compare to baseline

Every submission is measured against that student's own verified prior work — not a global AI-vs-human model. The baseline strengthens with use.

03

Read the evidence

Teachers get a one-page evidence document, not a percentage. Flagged passages link to the process moments that produced them.

05 — PRODUCT · EVIDENCE PANEL

The microscope, not the verdict.

ESSAY · A. MARQUEZ · GRADE 11 1,284 WORDS · 92 MIN · 14 REVISIONS

The novel opens with an image of confinement that recurs through Chapter Three – the rusted gate, the locked study, the curtain drawn against the harbor. Marlowe's prose accumulates these symbols slowly, almost patiently, so that by the time the inheritance is announced the reader already feels the shape of the house closing in.

Furthermore, the symbolism of confinement serves as a profound metaphor that effectively underscores the protagonist's internal struggle, thereby enriching the narrative's thematic depth. In contrast, the second chapter eases the grip slightly: there is the morning at the dock, the open sail, the unforced laughter of strangers.

The reader notices, though, that even these scenes are framed by windows – and the windows are always shut.

06 — BRAND · COLOR

Parchment, ink, and a careful drop of coral.

The page should feel like paper — never punitive. Coral is a highlighter, not a wall paint.

Rules. No surface should be more than ~8% coral. Never use red — red is punishment, and Inkprint is not punishment.

Parchment, not pure white; pure white only for cards floating above the page.

09 — FINAL CTA

Evidence for the AI era.

Inkprint is in closed pilot with 5–10 teachers. Public beta in Q3. If you teach, run a department, or build the LMS — we'd love to show you the evidence panel.
